ARIZONA ENGINEER KILLED BY NATIVES IN AFRICAN JUNGLE

Elbridge Decker, Widely Known in Bisbee Meets Death While on Prospecting Trip With G. H. Newport in African Fields

Details reached Bisbee yesterday of the death in Africa of Elbridge G. Decker who was widely known in this locality as well as throughout the State. In a letter to friends here, Coxa-Denker of Buffalo, N. Y., minounced that she had just receives word that her brother was shot to death by natives in the African wilds in June. The information came in a report from the leader of a hand of engineers prospecting for a mining company to the African diamond fields, of which Mr. Decker was a member. The report states that the natives made the at tack on the engineers without provocation or the alightest warning.

G. H. Newport, formerly of Rev. Arlzonn, was with Mr. Decker at the time. When the latter fell; mortalis wounded. Newport made heroic effort to get him to a place of concen Both men were armed with revolvers but the attack was so unexpected that they were powerless to offer much opposition. Newport, supporting the almost lifeless hody of Decker, held the natives at buy with his pistol while retreating toward a nearby river into which he plunged with his burden, The current swept the dying man from his arms. Newport dived and after passing through two dangerous rapids, escaped. After spending the night in the jungle he minds a search for Decker's body but it was never recovered. Newport later found the other members of the engineering party who summoned soldiers to the other men appeared succeedy and disferences with the general and Fran cots in that large dim library wher the little persant boy had sat with his thin ankles twisted about the legs of his high chair, and copied the history of Napoleon. These men paid grea attention nowadays to the words of that peasant boy.

"As soon as you are a little stronger," they said, "there is much work for you to do," and the general would come in at that point with a growl like distant thunder.

"He is to rest," the general would order. "He is to rest till his is well. He has done enough; let the boy alone, you others."

But the time came, six months after his return, when François must be sent to visit the officers of certain regiments thought to be secretly Bourpartist; when he, it was believed, could get into touch with them and tell them enough and not too much of the plans of the party, and find out where they stood and how much one might count on them. So, against the general's wish, Francois went off on a political mission. It proved more com pitcated than had seemed probable; he and endore exhausting experiences for which he was not yet fit. So that when he came house to Vicques, two inouths later, he was white and transparent and ill. And there were some of the mysterious men at the chateau to meet him, delighted, pittless. Delighted with the work he had done, with his daring and finesse and succees, without pity for his weakness, begging him to go at once on another The general was firm as to that; his boy should not be hounded; he should slay at home in the quiet old chuteau and got well. But the boy was restless; a fever of enthusiasm was on him and he wanted to do more and yel more for the prince's work.
